Karlu Karlu, or the Devils Marbles, is a living cultural landscape and the traditional country for the Warumungu, Kaytetye, Alyawarra and Warlpiri people.

Karlu Karlu, literally translated as ‘round boulders’, are a collection of gigantic rounded granite boulders, many of which are precariously balanced on top of one another. Scattered heaps of these ‘marbles’ occur across the wide, shallow valley that makes up the Reserve.

Karlu Karlu is recognised as being of great cultural significance and became a jointly managed park in 2009. Almost the entire Reserve is a registered sacred site and many stories and traditions are associated to the area.

Geologically, the marbles were formed from an upsurge of molten rock that cooled and became solid beneath a layer of sandstone. The solidifying granite caused vertical and horizontal fractures creating rectangular blocks. Over time, water infiltrated the cracks breaking down the sandstone, and then the granite. As a result, rounded granite boulders perched on top of each other have been revealed.

The heaps of granite boulders create a variety of miniature refuges and sheltered environments, where more sensitive plants like the native Rock Fig (Ficus brachypoda) survive.

Attached to the underside of overhanging boulders, clusters of the bottle-shaped mud nests of Fairy Martins (Petrochelidon ariel) may be found. Occasionally the small Black-headed Goanna (Varanus tristis) is seen in the crevices, while the larger Sand Goanna (Varanus gouldii) is more often found among the thick clumps of spinifex (Triodia spp.) growing in the spaces between the boulders. Flocks of birds including Zebra Finches (Taeniopygia guttata) and Painted Finches (Emblema pictum) are often found in the Reserve.
