Cash flow forecast notes
The cash flow forecast statement is a summary of the information built up on detailed work sheets which must be prepared on a monthly basis for the first year of operation. The monthly estimates should take into account the seasonal effects on sales.
Month 0	Is the period prior to trading commencing. Capital expenditure, preliminary expenses and personal commitments.
Month 1	Would be the first month of trading.
Receipts from credit customers	Would take into account the time delay in customers making payment. On the basis that trading terms would be 30 days from the date of the statement, the average delay should be taken as 60 days after the month of sale for cash receipts.
Capital expenditure	Should be shown in the month when the account is expected to be paid. This category would include the purchase of any fixed assets such as the following: a) Accommodation (offices, forecourt, workshop etc.) b) Motor vehicles c) Plant & Machinery d) Office equipment
Payment to suppliers	Should be shown in month payment is expected to be made regardless of when goods are received.
